

3D Modelling

3D modelling is becoming a popular way of showing a representation of a finished product for selling purposes, for example a new luxury block of apartments is going up and the sales office needs something to show potential buyers, instead of showing them 2D drawings we can take those drawings and from them produce a 3D model representation of what is going to be, then a camera walk through can be done and put it on a continuous loop to be played all day in the sales office. We can also do a 3D representation of the finished block of apartments on a huge colour poster showing what the finished structure will look like.

This is not just applicable to selling properties we can also do a 3D representation of mechanical components, furniture a whole range of products with any variations you like from colour to light source.
